dear paul and justin thanks so much for sending greg and team they are great if they arrived 2 hours earlier they would have been with me for this terrible scene i buried 170 people the day before they arrived today they went with 4 trucks of water food and medicine to the cathedral at miragoane at the request of the bishop andre dumas they are doing clinic for 2 days they will come back sun night and help me with a few hundred amputees thats the plan they are great thanks for sending them thanks for the fundraisers thanks for the prayers paul please forward to justin i dont have his email fraternally
rick cp

dear doug the quest for dignity and the desire to do the right thing are very important and ever present fr rickt

Ms Charlie Moore
Producer
AC360
CNN

Dear Ms Moore,

I want to thank CNN and Mr. Anderson Cooper for reporting on the fact that bodies of earthquake victims were unceremoniously dumped in Ti-Tanyen.

Please note that Haitians always show tremendous respect for our dead and that this thoughtless act should not in any way reflect who we are. Consequently, I want you to also report that as of today, Haitians have started the process to provide all the bodies dumped in Ti Tanyen a decent sepulture. In reality, over 1500 bodies were buried today and the remaining 1000 or so will be buried tomorrow.

I am attaching pictures that will show that on January 29, 2010, less than 12 hours after Mr. Cooper's report, Bishop Pierre André Dumas, Father Richard Leo Frechette and volunteers from Food for the Poor burnt incense, sprinkled holy water on the bodies, recited the rosary of the painful mysteries of Christ's life, dug mass graves and gave these poor souls a decent Christian burial.

Once again, on behalf of a mourning nation please accept the expression of our deepest gratitude for taking the time to inform us about an atrocious situation and allowing us to correct it as quickly and as decently as we know how.

Blessings and much love to you and all at CNN,

In His Glorious Name,

*Daniel-Gérard Rouzier
Chairman of the Board of Trustees
